

REMPLE OF LAID-BACK EUXURY IN BODRUM

the same same

THE MAÇAKIZI STORY

When Ayla Emiroglu moved here in 1977, there was little more than a few simple houses, cars and stray cats in Bodrum. It was a couple of thousand years after Homer talked about the "wine-dark sea" of the Aegean, but the sprawling peninsula adorned with its sweet orange and lime trees still possessed that ancient beauty, a faint decadence where the blinding rays of the sun meet the immersive blue of the sea and the sky. "Bodrum was my freedom," says Emiroglu, the enchanting owner of Maçakızı, the hotel that helped made this town a destination for the global glitterati.

Maçakızı is the Queen of Spades, a symbol of intelligence and beauty that, in fact, inspired a fellow Bodrum lover to name the hotel for Ms. Emiroglu. Infused with her sophisticated, yet subtle style, what started as a small pension in downtown Bodrum turned into one of the most cherished temples of laid-back luxury in the Mediterranean. Her magnetic personality created an atmosphere that drew crowds of intellectuals and artists to this quaint little town. Where else could you run into Ahmet Ertegün, Mick Jagger and Nureyev having a lavish lunch by the sea but Ayla's table...

Emiroglu was the headmistress, the boss lady that talked to the wildflowers on her property and disciplined her staff without so much as an admonishment. She worked with the same people for years, and they loved her. She fed the most basic staples of Turkish home cooking to the wealthiest, and they loved it. They loved it so much that they would follow her wherever she went - even to the first ever beach club she opened in a far-flung bay, inaccessible by any other mode of transportation but boat.

Sahir Erozan, Founding partner of Maçakızı.

Then came along her son, Sahir Erozan, who had been writing his own success story in a different part of the world, in Washington D.C. He was the maverick that created several hip restaurants and clubs in the U.S. capital. He vaguely remembered the smell of jasmine in the garden of his mother's little pension in Bodrum. But it was during a trip in the early 1990's that he fell in love with the peninsula again and decided to work with his mother first in her second beach club project in Gölköy, and then the property that we know and love today as Maçakızı Hotel in Türkbükü.

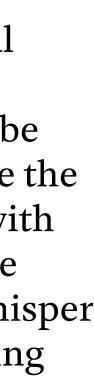

Erozan married his mother's authentic, rustic style with his own vision of contemporary luxury. Rooms were renovated with the demands of a new generation of travelers in mind. The menu was updated with flavors from around the world as a result of Erozan's travels with his executive chef, Aret Sahakyan. There were many changes to adapt the hotel to the changing times but one crucial aspect remained the same: the boho-chic spirit of Bodrum Ayla Emiroglu has cultivated since the beginning. That social club vibe where no one bats an eye at a celebrity basking in the sun, where the staff knows everyone by their name and you get to chat all day with the owner smoking his cigar at the bar. And that proved to be the best recipe to attract a loyal following around the world, who whisper to each other that Maçakızı is the summer home they love coming back to every year. And so the legend goes.

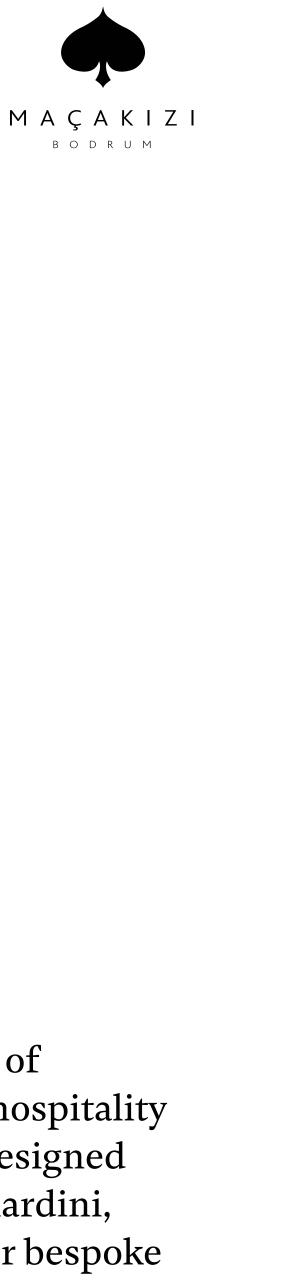

"Macakizi in Bodrum, It is in a beautiful bay with the bluest, clearest water. The landscaping is mesmerising. The food from chef Aret Sahakyan is so good that once I stayed for 14 days and never left the hotel for a single meal-Recommended by Izak Senbahar, owner of smart New York City hotel The Mark"

The Maçakızı family is now growing with the addition of Villa Maçakızı, which expand the legendary Maçakızı hospitality tradition into new experiences. With its 10 elegantly designed rooms and impeccable cuisine executed by Carlo Bernardini, Villa Maçakızı is your ultimate private summer villa for bespoke occasions and unforgettable vacations in Bodrum.

Kate Moss is said to have ence checked out of a nearby detox centre and bolted to the boagainvillea-clad terraces of its 🗧 collection of villas (founded in 1977 by surrent owner Sahir Erozan's mother Ayla Emiroglu). New this year is the palatal 10-bedroom Villa Maçakizis available for private hire, it's located on a lavender-scented hilltop above Paradise Bay, a short boat ride away. The familiar boho-cool, white-on-azare Maçakizi aesthetic infuses its ses-view unites, infinity pool and beachfront cahana scene, but it's all your own private domain: you won't see high-tollers tocking up in their yachts to hang out over lanch. On call 24/7, the villa team aim to spoil, chef Carlo Bernardini produces feasts of fresh pasta, salads and grilled scafood – including boark, the local lobster. This hotel is actually a collection of villas on one of the most beautiful of Bodrum's peninsulas and was opened in the 1970s as a hangout for writers and artists. Times have changed, as has Bodrum - these days Macakizi's patrons include the supermodel Kate Moss and any number of sheikhs and oligarchs, who moor their yachts in the nearby marina. But the laid-back vibe remains, enhanced by its lush gardens, private beach and elegantly designed interiors. The hotel has its own speedboat, which you can rent for the day to take you to other parts of this lovely area.

In the 1970s Mick Jagger, Rudolf Nureyev and their pals flocked to the sleepy fishing village of Türkbükü on the west coast of Turkey, lured by a boho B&B run by flamboyant host Ayla Emiroğlu. Thirty years later, her son Sahir Erozan had loftier visions, transforming the modest guesthouse into Maçakizi - 74 rooms spread across four bougairivillaea-bright terraces on a sweeping site overlooking a beryl-blue bay. Today the whitewashed hangout is a magnet for Istanbul's soigne night-owls and well-heeled Euros - you can see why the buzzing peninsula is often labelled the St Tropez of Turkey, Breakfast (pillow-soft sesame pide slathered with honeycomb) is taken late. By midday, rows of beach beds are strewn with Hermès sarongs and everyone seems to know each other. Stealth yachts and teak sailboats anchor for the night so their inhabitants can come ashore to feast on chef Aret Sahakyan's deft cooking: creamy calamari carbonara and delicate lamb monti (dumplings). It could be just another frou-frou designer resort. Yet Maçakizi is unlike anywhere else, because it has identity, personality and a twinkle in Its eye. This is all to do with the wonderfully charismatic Erozan, who flits between his many friends (Kate Moss is a regular), Cohiba clenched between his teeth, vodka on the rocks clinking. The white and taupe bedrooms are lovely but most of the action takes place outside the beach deck, the breezy restaurant, the waterside bar for Bellinis. It has all the signatures you would expect from a cool independent hotel: a boutique stocking local designers (the Mae Zae bashed-gold earrings are hard to resist), a Bodyism gym and its own wonderful boat, Halas 71, a converted 1914 steam liner. Yet more than that, Maçakizi is simply a club you want to be part of Doubles from about £425; macakizi.com

Forget France and Italy: The Turkish Riviera's Maçakizi Is The Place to Be This Summer

Duncan Madden Contributor (2) Litextyle Enertity logical, environmental and experimited lower disease.

Turkey's Bodrum peninsula is an absolute gem. Fringed by the crystal clear Acgean sea and peppered with authentic and pretty towns and villages, the Turquoise Coast as it's known is inevitably and rightly getting more and more attention from wealthy vacationers around the world.

The Mazahizi makes perfect use of its Bodrom setting on the shares of the Aegyan. " once

That has brought with it a glut of luxury resorts – Aman, Mandarin Oriental and a particularly ugly Hilton hotel all occupy prime spots up on pine-flecked hills over luminous blue bays, but it's the Turkish owned Maçakizi that's the pick of the bunch. While not the most luxe (though high-end nonetheless), its more amenable price point (double rooms start from €425 ($475) in low season and €595 ($665) in high season including breakfast and dinner) and unassailable status as the best beach club in Bodrum make it the most compelling choice. Among them sit 53 simple but comfortable rooms and 21 suites, many but not all offering ocean views. Beds are big and courfy, doused in feather soft covers and Rifat Oxbek-designed cushions. My vast Bose TV sits unused on the wall as I prefer the views from my small private tarrace. Bathrooms are travertine tiled with minforest showers and Acqua di Parma toiletries.

Sensibly placed close to the rooms sits the airy breakfast pavilion alongside a quiet, deserted pool – a conundrum quickly answered when compared to the waterfront setting, Below, a spa offering hammam and massage and a gym so buried behind plants it feels like working out in an airconditioned minforest.

"Maçakızı has encapsulated the spirit of Bodrum since it was opened in 1975 Sahir Erozan's mother. It's authentically Turkish yet completely international, pretty yet progressive, barefoot and sexy as hell."

Fix mindset, movement, nutrition and sleep at Bodyism at Macakizi

Want to work out like an A-lister? Maybe in an outdoor studio by the ocean? With their ruthlessly effective personal training and high-luxe locations, it's no wonder many of Hollywood's elite blaze a trail to Bodyism. If you're interested in a full-body reset with a kick of sunshine, you'd do well to consider their new retreats in Kate Moss' favourite Bodrum hotel, Macakizi.

Entirely bespoke, each retreat begins with a full-body analysis, encompassing sleep patterns, nutritional deficits and hormone imbalances. This information feeds into a programme based on functional strength and interval work, balanced with yoga and massage. Each session builds to the next so your body is efficiently and completely worked – a wonderful excuse to spend the rest of your time idling among the beautiful people on sundecks built out over the Aegean.

For those who are less interested in change, but who want to maintain their physique while dancing late under the stars with the supermodels who come ashore from their superynchts – no problem. "Some people come for transformation," says Nathalie Schyllert, the fearsomely talented former model and CEO who has taken over James Duigan's share of the Bodyism business. "Some people come to Bodyism to balance the partying..." There's even a Bodyism-styled cocktail of vodka, mint and lime.

"The executive chef there, Aret Sahakyan, has been in place for 25 years and is regularly cited as the most accomplished exponent of Turkish gastronomy outside of İstanbul."
